KLEIN & WILSON

LEGAL MALPRACTICE AND BUSINESS TRIAL LAWYERS

CLIENTS INJURED BY LAWYERS HAVE AN ADVOCATE

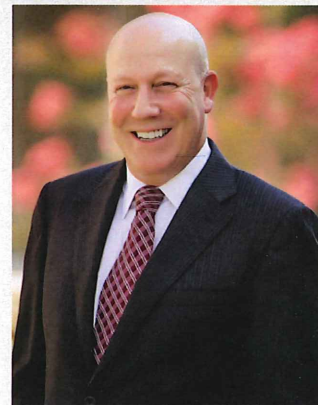

Unfortunately, legal malpractice happens frequently. Most often, the consequences are minor. In some cases, legal malpractice can ruin companies and people's lives. While there are thousands of attorneys ready to take on formidable adversaries in the business world, there are few attorneys willing to file legal malpractice cases. And for good reason. Attorney defendants are daunting adversaries. As deductibles on malpractice policies have increased, settling malpractice cases has become overly difficult. Settlements directly impact partnership profits, and law firms are reluctant to use partnership profits to pay claims, even when malpractice is obvious. Clients who sue their former lawyers must be prepared for bitter litigation and trial.

The good news for damaged clients is that lawyers generally make bad witnesses, and the public still views lawyers with contempt (a reputation not earned by the vast majority of practicing attorneys). Accordingly, while legal malpractice cases tend to be hard fought, clients who make it to the finish line have a good chance of prevailing in front of a jury. Klein & Wilson has recovered over $100 million for its clients and is ready to challenge the largest law firms in malpractice cases. Klein & Wilson has a 90 percent win rate at trial. The firm is one of the leading malpractice law firms in California, and Gerald Klein earned the Trial Lawyer of the Year award for handling a legal malpractice case where he recovered approximately $9 million after a jury trial. The firm has been listed in SuperLawyers since 2005 and was ranked in the 2016 edition of "Best Law Firms" in U.S. News & World Report.
